COLIN NAMED EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

Dr. Colin Begg, is taking over the role of Editor-in-Chief of Clinical Trials, an international scholarly journal devoted to clinical trials methodology, covering data management, trial logistics, design and conduct of trials, statistical methods, impact of trials on practice and policy, ethics, law and regulation, synthesis and evidence evaluation, history, education and training, patient-related issues, decision analysis, and commentaries on current or controversial issues in clinical trials. Dr. Begg’s editorial team consists of five Deputy Editors, one of whom is Mithat Gönen. Katherine Wong has assumed the role of Assistant Editor for the journal. In this role she will function as the nerve center of all activities, tracking submitted manuscripts, preparing material for the production team at the publishers, and communicating with authors. Since September the new team has been handling all submitted manuscripts. Dr. Begg’s official position as Editor-in-Chief begins in January, 2014. Clinical Trials is published bi-monthly and is sponsored by the international Society for Clinical Trials.

ALLISON LIPITZ-SNYDERMAN AWARDED GRANT FROM UNITED HOSPITAL FUND

Allison Lipitz-Snyderman was awarded a $70K grant from the United Hospital Fund, which was one of nine grants totaling $475, 000 for projects to improve healthcare services in New York. Her study titled “Adverse events in cancer care: Development of a medical record-based screening tool to detect adverse events in cancer care” will hope to improve cancer care by creating a low burden screening tool to help detect adverse events and harm from patient medical records. Information obtained using this tool can help to estimate the burden of adverse events in cancer care, identify patient sub-groups at high risk, prioritize issues for improvement, and develop quality measures for surveillance and policy initiatives. A comprehensive understanding of adverse events in cancer care, and an effective and efficient mechanism to obtain this information, can help to improve the quality of care and patient outcomes. Cami Sima, Aileen Killen, David Pfister, David Classen (Pascal Metrics and University of Utah School of Medicine), and Saul Weingart (Tufts Medical Center) are also investigators on this project.

PUBLICATION

*Design Considerations for Dose-Expansion Cohorts in Phase I Trials*

Alexia Iasonos recently co-authored an article in the Journal of Clinical Oncology evaluating on the design and safety monitoring of Phase I trials. The inclusion of dose expansion cohorts has been increasingly used in Phase I trials with the aim to further assess the experimental agent’s safety profile and obtain preliminary efficacy results. They are also used to identify a more homogenous group of patients and decide which disease indication to take further into the Phase II testing. The design and safety monitoring of such trials should be considered in the context of dose expansion cohorts within Phase I trials and the article discusses the challenges of dose expansion cohorts in Phase I trials.
